Jaclyn never would have thought that walking into church late on a Sunday morning would have such an incredible outcome. Because that morning is when she saw Justin for the first time. As she began to take her seat, this man caught her eye. Intrigued by his grungy, bad boy persona, she delightfully said “good morning” to his as he passed her in the aisle. A few Sundays later, Jaclyn noticed quickly that Justin was on stage behind the drum kit. As he came off stage, he sat right in front of her, distracting Jaclyn and her mother all service with his remarkable tattoos. Once the service was over, she couldn’t resist talking to him any longer, and tapped him on the shoulder. And that was the beginning of it all...

The proposal was such a blissful day for the couple. They were both asked to model for a Valentines Day campaign, so the Justin ceased the opportunity. The couple arrived at the Mayo Hotel Crystal Ballroom, where touchups for hair, makeup and wardrobe were. After a bit of shooting separately, Jaclyn and Justin met in the middle of the ballroom, and danced for the first time to “These Arms of Mine” by Otis Redding. Later, they sat at a beautiful round table where floral arrangements and champagne sat. After a couple of moments, Justin took a deep breath and said “So...” After that first work, Jaclyn knew what was about to follow. He then expressed his affection for her, and she of course said “YEST!”

On April 11, 2015 Jaclyn and Justin were married at Skelly Lodge in Catoosa, Oklahoma. They celebrated by giving the wedding their own style, where tan, cream, gold, and peach filled the venue. The main wedding cake was a fresh strawberry and vanilla bean cake, topped with fresh basil butter cream. As for Justin’s “cake”, he chose key lime pie.

They only saw fitting to end the night by dancing to “These Arms of Mine”, before departing on their honeymoon to Maui. The lovely couple now resides in Los Angeles.
